Cultural Background
The Native peoples of South Dakota all belong to a confederacy of nations. The term “Sioux,” however, is inappropriate to use since it is not a word in any of the three divisions of the Oceti Sakowin confederacy. The term “Sioux” is a contraction by French speakers of the Ojibwa term for the Oceti Sakowin people. The Ojibwa people and the Oceti Sakowin were often, if not usually, in conflict. Therefore, when the first non-Native people who lived to the west, the Ojibwas answered “Nadeowaseau,” a word that means “Little Enemy.” The French speakers abbreviated the Ojibwa word to the sound of its final syllable, and pluralized it by adding an “x” when they spelled it. Since then, the Oceti Sakowin people have been called “Sioux,” The Oceti Sakowin peoples, however, refer to themselves by the division to which they belong: Dakota, Nakota, or Lakota” (Center for American Indian Research and Native Studies, 2012).

“A long time ago, the people had one council fire and made their winter camp in the region of the pintes at a place called Mde Wakan (Spirit Lake, known today as Mille Lacs, Minnesota). Their village was called Mdewakantonwan (Spirit Lake Village) and they have been known by that name ever since. The Mdewakantonwans are the original Council Fire of the Oceti Sakowin.” (Center for American Indian Research and Native Studies, 2012)
